Then the individuals go back outside to a second door to receive prepackaged groceries. At this time, clients are not allowed in to the pantry to select items themselves. At mobile truck distribution sites, where feasible, they will implement a drive-up model so clients do not get out of their cars. The clients at mobiles also do not have to physically sign to receive services at this time to limit contact and to implement social distancing. GCFB is also working with various entities to add additional mobile truck distribution sites.
